Cardiff, Wales. Welsh museum of natural history, arts, and antiquities, Cardiff.

The museum was based upon collections of the Cardiff atheneum and mechanics' institute (founded about 1850) which were transferred later to the Cardiff literary and philosophic institute (discontinued 1893).

In 1903 the Free library committee of the Cardiff corporation applied for the collection, and it was placed under its care.
In 1907 the Cardiff naturalists' society was founded, having as its main purpose the development of the museum; it continued to have charge of it until 1970 when control was taken over by the Cardiff corporation, the society continuing, however, to have a close connection with the museum.

Cardiff, Wales. Welsh museum of natural history, arts, and antiquities. (Card 2)

Up to 1901 the name of the museum appears not to have been authoritatively defined; it was known as Cardiff museum, Corporation museum and art gallery, Public museum and art gallery, Corporation museum and art gallery. In 1901 the name Welsh museum of natural history, arts, and antiquities, was adopted, though it was still referred to as Cardiff museum, Cardiff municipal museum, or Welsh museum.

On November 15, 1912, the museum was formally transferred to the National museum of Wales (chartered 1907) its collections being known in the new museum as "The Cardiff collections".

West Punjab.

West Punjab, a province of Pakistan, was separated from the former Punjab province of India under the India Independence Act of 1947, effective July 18, 1947.-cf. Whitaker's Almanack, 1948.
In 1950, the Pakistan Government passed legislation to rename the West Punjab the Punjab. The Indian Government took a similar step with the East Punjab.-cf. Whitaker's Almanack, 1951. For purposes of clarity this catalog continued to enter the publications of Punjab (India) under East Punjab and those of Punjab (Pakistan) under West Punjab, 1930-Sept. 1955.

See next card

In Oct. 1955 the West Punjab ceased to exist when it was incorporated into the new Pakistan province of West Pakistan. Publications of the only remaining Punjab, the Indian State, beginning Oct. 1955 were returned to the original entry, Punjab.
